our child has recently been diagnosed with a hearing loss, and we know only too well what you're going through. We first found out that our daughter Melissa had a hearing loss when she was eleven months old, and we were in a state of shock. We didn't know anyone who was deaf and didn't know where to turn. So many questions ran through our minds: will she ever learn to talk? Will she ever go to college? What will her life be like?

Once we found the proper support and education, we realized that everything would be okay.

When we suspected that our child had a hearing loss, we took her to the League for the Hard of Hearing. At the League we found warm and caring professionals who helped guide us through the overwhelming decision making process, helping us to develop our next steps. Melissa began intensive speech and language therapy at the League and learned to talk. The League emphasized that our involvement as parents was critical to her progress and development. The League also helped us to see that Melissa was just like any other kid; she just happened to have a hearing loss.

Melissa was mainstreamed throughout her entire education, which included graduating from Yale University and receiving her law degree from Georgetown University. She recently passed the Bar and is currently a practicing attorney in Washington D.C. She also has lots of friends and a full and active social life. In short, she is doing great!

So, take a deep breath, read this informational packet, and, as we did, with the help of the League for the Hard of Hearing, you too can assure a world without limits for your child.

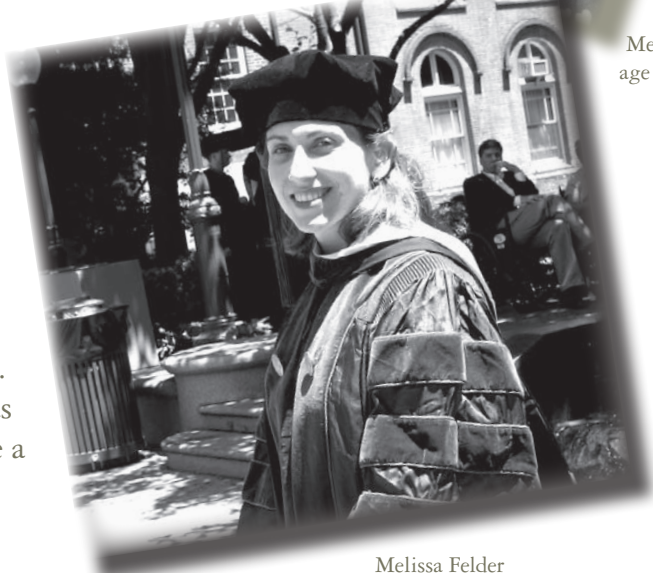

All our best wishes,

Barry & Robyn Felder

The League for the Hard of Hearing's mission is to improve the quality of life for infants, children and adults with all degrees of hearing loss.

We accomplish our mission by providing hearing rehabilitation and human services for people who are hard of hearing or deaf, and their families, regardless of age, ability to pay, or mode of communication, and by striving to empower consumers to achieve their potential.

Our leadership is exemplified by adhering to the highest clinical standards, conducting extensive hearing conservation and public education programs about hearing, and developing best practice models for disciplines that relate to hearing and research.
